What is new in this release: This release is mainly a maintenance release, and contains no new features. a firearm to make more efficient use of the firearm. In the case of the revolver, the cylinder is loaded in the proper position for the next shot by flicking a cylinder latch back into place. The cylinder is then removed from the firearm and placed on a revolver receiver such that the cylinder latch engages a latch on the receiver. The cylinder is then inserted back into the receiver such that the cylinder latch engages a latch on the cylinder, thereby locking the cylinder in place. The cylinder is thus ready to be fired by a new insertion of a cylinder. For the semi-automatic pistol, the cylinder is usually loaded into the pistol in the cocked position, and the cylinder is removed from the pistol after each shot. This allows for the replacement of the cylinder with the least amount of force, and allows for the most speed. There is a need for a firearm that allows a person to quickly and easily load and unload a cylinder of a revolver without the firearm being placed in a firing position.
